1st International Working Group on Thalassemia:

IS IT TIME TO REVISIT CLASSIFICATION OF THALASSEMIA SYNDROMES?

CAMPUS OF HEMATOLOGY
"Franco e Piera Cutino"
A.O.R. "Villa Sofia - V. Cervello"
Palermo (Italy)

Invited Chairs:
Antonis Kattamis, Aurelio Maggio, Khaled Musallam and Ali Taher

Organized by Prof. Aurelio Maggio
Dear all,

Thank you very much for accepting to join the International Working Group (IWG) on Thalassemia.

The main aim for establishing this IWG is to revisit the conventional thalassemia classification of severity (Thalassemia Major and Intermedia), owing to recent evidence suggesting the dichotomy may not be as distinct and in view of recent changes in patient management and identification of phenotypes based on transfusion requirement.

In order to do that, we would need first to reach a consensus on the key factors to consider for such a revision, through a standard methodology and evidence grading system (e.g.,GRADE by Guyatt et al., 2008). In this context, some thoughts to consider for defining disease severity through a new model, subject to discussion during the meeting, would be:

1) The quality/grade of evidence for the currently used criteria to differentiate thalassemia major versus intermedia at initial diagnosis:
   • age of diagnosis (<2 vs >2 years old)
   • Hemoglobin level (<7 vs >7 g/dl)
   • growth failure (<3 percentile)
   • Hemoglobin electrophoresis results

2) The risks versus benefits of including patients in transfusional regimens independent of age and hemoglobin level at onset of the disease, with periodical re-evaluation

3) The quality/grade of evidence for the currently used criteria to start iron chelation therapy
   • age (2 years or older)
   • transfusions (10-20 tx)
   • serum ferritin level (> 1000 ng/mL)
   • LIC >7 mg Fe/g (with age-related assessment limitations)

4) The wide spectrum of disease severity in patients currently labelled as thalassemia intermedia, with respect to pathogenesis and clinical complications profile.

We would need to identify those factors that determine severity of disease and then find a method to quantify those factors (based on existing literature or new research) to come up with different levels of severity, formulating a scoring system which should be independent of local health systems. Until our meeting, you can think of those pathophysiologic and clinical indicators that you would recommend to define severity of thalassemia syndromes. It should be noted that a similar exercise has been recently conducted by Cappellini and colleagues (EJIM 2016) who developed a scoring system for non-transfusion-dependent thalassemia. We can use this as a starting model to go through the same exercise for all thalassemia phenotypes. Furthermore, we will discuss how to validate this scoring system. To do that we can either get a large data set and look at the association between the newly developed scoring/classification system against outcomes.

Finally, if consensus is reached we will aim to submit our results to a leading international journal.

Best regards

Antonis Kattamis, Khaled Musalam, Ali Taher, & Aurelio Maggio
